SENATOR CHAMBERS: Yes, I would, Mr. President. And if I happen to be speaking when the amendment comes in, somebody can just let me know, and I will terminate my remarks. But working through very difficult issues can be a very difficult process. But out of apparent chaos can emerge something which has substance, reasonableness, and validity. But, as they say, before you can have omelets, you have to break eggs. And somebody has to break the eggs. Nobody wants to be the egg. You can ask Humpty Dumpty about that question. But the issues that remain, as far as I'm concerned, are where this boot camp ought to be appropriately located. There were agreements worked out with reference to some aspects of this problem. Senator Wickersham had detected three distinct issues. One of them remains, as far as I'm concerned, and that's whether or not this boot camp ought to be at McCook. When there was discussion about locating that boot camp near a prison, nothing was said about the prison being at McCook, nothing was said about the boot camp being at McCook. There was set up a site selection committee to locate the prison. Governor Nelson tried to get in the middle of that, and I did all I could to slap him down, and I think I was successful. He wanted to dictate where the prison would go, and he wanted to put that in his old home town. But it didn't work. So, the prison and the boot camp were looked at as an entity. When the prison was not placed in McCook, as the Governor wanted, but the experts in corrections felt should not be the case, the Governor, on his own, ran out to McCook and said, but we're still going to put the boot camp out here, even though the prison is someplace else. The two were to be together. Senator Engel will confirm that, because he was here, just like I was. Governor Nelson, like a spoiled brat, couldn't get his way on the prison, so he decided to sabotage everything. And I don't think the Legislature is bound to go along with that. Just like the Legislature is not bound to build a maximum security prison. The Legislature can decide that that is not sound policy and can change its mind. Courts have said that over, and over, and over, and over that legislatures have that freedom. And the legislators are to exercise their best judgment. Some legislator's best judgment is determined by political considerations. Others have their judgment determined by what they think, based on information that they have, is in the best interests of the state. And what is deemed to be in the best interests of the state is whatever it is that will
